

From where I sit

Perspectives on race and justice

Tuesday November 17 | 4pm

Live at: https://youtu.be/gA_4MP1bCZE

Perceptions of justice vary depending upon where people are positioned in the criminal justice system. The view from the bench is very different from that of the defendant's box. Join our discussion of how justice and race play out in the courtroom and beyond.

Omari Amili is an author, advocate, and educator who was formerly incarcerated via the school-to-prison pipeline.

Victoria Pratt is former Chief Judge in Newark Municipal Court in New Jersey, and strong advocate for reform of the criminal justice system.

Thank you to our cosponsors

Alpha Phi Sigma Criminal Justice Honors Society, Black Student Union, Black Women's Caucus, Criminal Justice Graduate Student Association, the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology, Department of Sociology, School of Languages, Cultures, and Race, the School of Politics, Philosophy, and Public Affairs, and the Program in Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies