The wealth of the top 1% has grown dramatically relative to the wealth of the working poor. At the same time, IRS audit rates on the working poor have increased so that this group is audited about as frequently as the top 1%. Is anything wrong with this picture? And if so, how can it be fixed?

Nina Olson is currently the Executive Director of the Center for Taxpayer Rights. For the 18 years ending in July 2019, she served as the IRS National Taxpayer Advocate and was the principal author of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, which was adopted by the IRS in 2014, and it became federal law in 2019.
