The Sarkozy Presidency: Continuity or Change?

Nicolas Sarkozy was elected as French President in May 2007, with a significant majority over Socialist opponent Segolene Royal. Has his election signaled a radical or a reasonable break in policies within France? How will the constitutional reforms passed in July 2008 affect the power of the President and the French Parliament?

Fabrice Hourquebie is Professor of Public Law at the University of Toulouse where he teaches constitutional law, comparative law, and institutional law of the European Union. Hourquebie holds a PhD in Constitutional Law, focusing on the separation of powers. He has served as collaborator to the Constitutional court of South Africa and is a researcher with the French Constitutional Council.
