Sam Reed, Secretary of State for Washington
“Fixing Elections”

Events in the 2000 Presidential election, and the 2004 Washington State Gubernatorial race, have led people to question if there is a problem with our current election system. Is there a more effective method for people to vote and for those votes to be counted?

The Secretary of State's Office is responsible for supervising voter registration and elections in the State of Washington. Sam Reed, Washington State Secretary of State and a WSU Alum will be discussing his office's efforts to solve voting problems in Washington State and also the decision to change Washington's voting structure to a vote-by-mail system.

Join us for coffee, doughnuts and discussion about how to run elections.
