

A FOOD INSPECTOR TALKS ABOUT PIC TRAINING

PIC training is a 4-hour workshop to help shift leaders, managers, supervisors, and owners meet Washington state food safety regulations. Training topics include:

- Foodborne illnesses
- Employee Health
- Temperature Control
- Cross Contamination
- Bare Hand Contact & Hand Washing
- Cleaning & Sanitizing
- Responsibilities of a PIC

PIC Training DOES NOT replace Certification as a Food Protection Manager OR the Washington Food & Beverage Worker's Permit

Participants receive a Certificate of Completion that qualifies them for a 5-year food handler's card upon renewal.

What success have you seen or experienced as a result of the PIC training?

I have had several new operators take the PIC training prior to opening their restaurant, and often find them to be much more knowledgeable about food safety and food safety requirements.

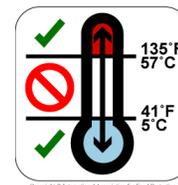

They are more inquisitive, asking me questions based on something they learned during the PIC training, and really want to ensure their food is as safe as possible for customers.

Operators who complete the PIC training are much better equipped to develop procedures and train staff with food safety as a priority because they have an extra level of understanding about food safety.

What do you think lead to that success?

The PIC training gives a lot more in depth information about food safety, particularly in discussing why food safety requirements exist and what could happen if they are not followed.

When people understand the true consequences of unsafe food practices, it motivates them to take food safety seriously to protect their customers and their business.

What do you see the future of PIC being?

I would like to see someone in every food facility be it a restaurant, grocery store, convenience store, coffee shop, et cetera go through the PIC training. The more well-trained operators we have, the better food safety will be in Clark County.

Would you recommend PIC training to the facilities you inspect?

Yes!
I recommend the PIC training to all of my newly permitted facilities during plan review.
