Abstract

This study assessed providers' willingness to adopt PSA guidelines from either the USPSTF, AUA, or ACS following an educational module. The intervention group was given a baseline survey and a post-educational module survey. The control group took only the baseline survey. The baseline survey suggested that most providers were following the USPSTF guidelines; however, all of the providers expressed the use of PSA screening in their patients. This is incongruent with USPSTF guidelines. More providers were willing to follow the AUA and ACS guidelines than the USPSTF following an educational module. Providers were unwilling to cease PSA screening completely.
