Psych Students,

We are now in week 9! Holds such as the undergraduate advising hold, writing portfolio hold, etc have now been placed on student's accounts. Take a look at your holds in myWSU and take care of them before registration begins in November. You should all have an individual enrollment date listed in myWSU. This is the day and time that you can begin to enroll for spring 2023. Set a reminder for yourself so you don’t forget. Prior to registration we recommend that you fill up your shopping cart with classes (and some backup classes) and select validate to make sure that you meet the prerequisites for all of the courses in your cart.

You may find that during this busy time it may be hard to find an appointment on your advisor’s calendar. Here are some tips: (1) Try visiting their drop in hours. (2) Sometimes quick questions can be resolved in an email. (3) Visit your Psych Peer Mentors. They have virtual and in person hours every day. Click on this link to view their availability: https://psychology.wsu.edu/undergrad/mentoring-program/. (4) Also continue to check your advisor's Booking page to see if an earlier time becomes available.

Students interested in graduate school should pay close attention to the events that highlight in this week’s newsletter. And don’t miss the upcoming career workshops starting on page 8.

WSU recently launched a new suite of mobile-based mental health resources for students. These resources are free and available 24 hours a day and 365 days a year for students on all campuses. See the flyer on page 9 for more information.

Help Available for Personal Statements:
Application Statement Feedback Program

The goal of this program is to provide fast, constructive feedback and editing support for the research/personal statements of PhD applicants in psychology, with an emphasis on underrepresented minorities and/or those who are not ‘in the know.’

Last year, they were able to serve 155 applicants who identified in one or both of these ways. This year, feedback will be provided by faculty and graduate students from top psychology PhD programs across the country with expertise in the following subfields of psychology: developmental, cognitive, social, and clinical psychology.

Here is a brief timeline of events for applicants to the program:

- Applicants can submit their statements through the submission portal between Monday, October 17 and Friday October 20.
- Each accepted applicant will be matched with two editors (our team is made up of faculty members, postdocs, and PhD students) in a double-blind process.
- High-level feedback will be returned to applicants on Friday, October 28, about one week after the submission portal closed.

The program is volunteer supported, and completely free to applicants.
