

Woman of Two Waters

When will you come from the North?

You live far from water, far from me,
far from sound.

I have pressed your name into the night,
begged for it back.

Asked with my hands and silence and lamb
raw like August jewels.

Asked for you and came up empty.

I open the window.

The clouds carry
the sorrow of the sky.