Birdsong

Spilling from hidden nests
Sounds I could not hope to sing
Smoothing over the thin edges of the morning
And I wonder briefly
What rich lining soothes their throats,
What bright quickness shapes their tongues,
That lends soft wings to these bundled notes,
As they fall like golden beads into the fragile air